Huddlestock has during July launched its GIGA Broker offering to a selected user group in Germany

Huddlestock Fintech AS ("Huddlestock" or the "Company") has entered the next stage of the GIGA Broker commercial rollout by launching the live platform to a select user group. This is an important step toward full commercial launch, helping validate operations, gather user feedback, and improve the customer experience.

"This controlled launch represents a key operational milestone in our European expansion," says Leif Arnold Thomas, CEO of Huddlestock. "It allows us to deploy the GIGA platform under market conditions to a broader group of end users. We are proud to reach this stage and are now progressing toward a full public commercial launch planned in September, guided by the insights gained from this release".

Through the GIGA platform, the users can now trade both crypto assets and traditional securities on a single platform.

Growing through strong partner ecosystems

Huddlestock is building a strong partner ecosystem, enabling customers to efficiently launch and scale their investment services through its IaaS offering. Together with GIGA Broker, Devexperts, a global software developer for the capital markets, and the German fintech company Tradevest Digital Assets GmbH ("Tradevest"), the companies continue to collaborate closely toward a planned commercial market launch in September.

During this controlled launch, Huddlestock gain valuable feedback as the platform is further refined and expanded with additional capabilities, including enhanced user experience features, savings plans, and, subject to regulatory approval, tokenized securities trading.
