

Huddlestock and Gigabroker have jointly decided to launch the trading platform on iOS, Android and web simultaneously with official launch targeted for late November 2026

Gigabroker is built on Huddlestock's European Investment-as-a-Service platform and regulatory framework. It gives German retail investors access to stocks, ETFs, savings plans and crypto in one app. The platform operates under BaFin supervision. Huddlestock believes that Gigabroker, as a new player built on state-of-the-art technology, will be an attractive platform in the German market.

The platform core architecture is feature complete. In line with highest industry standards, Huddlestock and Gigabroker will use the coming weeks for final routine testing of stability and performance under load. Launching on all channels at the same time gives customers access to the full product offering from day one.

Gigabroker's owner, AVL, already serves approximately 65,000 customers, who make up the initial addressable base at launch. Huddlestock earns revenue from the partnership based on trading activity on the platform.

Gigabroker's ambition is to become one of the leading neobrokers in Germany, aiming to sustainably scale the platform to support over 200,000 customers within three years.
